The Use of Restrictive Interventions

The legal framework

Tuesday 17 July 2018 De Vere West One Conference Centre, London

This practical masterclass is facilitated by Kate Hill Solicitor InPractice and will offer practical guidance on the use of restrictive interventions and the legal framework.

Healthcare professionals may not think that they use restrictive interventions but enhanced observations, physical restraint, mechanical restraint, chemical restraint, searches, seclusion and long-term segregation are all considered to be restrictive interventions and should be used with appropriate policies and procedures in place. It is important that restrictive interventions are used appropriately, legally and ethically and also part of a care programme aimed at reducing the interventions.

Delegates will have the opportunity to raise issues and concerns specific to their own practice, with the emphasis being on allowing delegates to train other members of staff on the course content. The course will be run by an experienced Mental Healthcare Lawyer and will be case study led.
